WHEN BROTHERS BECOME ALLIES, SISTERS BREAK BARRIERS

The journey to equality begins when brothers choose to stand beside their sisters, not in front of them.

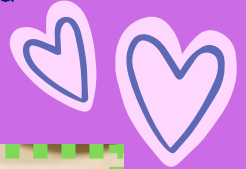

A compelling stage performance by LGU students showed that gender equality begins at home, where brothers can challenge stereotypes and stand beside their sisters as partners in achieving their dreams.

Written by Dua from the Department of Psychology, the thought-provoking play followed the journey of a young girl whose dream of competing in a karate championship was dismissed by her father, while her brother's ambitions were readily encouraged. Refusing to accept this injustice, the brother persuaded their father to recognize his daughter's potential and support her aspirations. Given the opportunity, she went on to win the championship, prompting her father to acknowledge his mistake and reaffirm that talent and determination are not defined by gender. The performance concluded with a powerful message, urging audiences to foster equal opportunities for girls and challenge deeply rooted social biases.

Every better world
begins with a better
home, where daughters
are believed, brothers
are allies, and dreams
have no gender.

Do
what is right,
not what is traditional.
